

A Little Seasonable Advice in Regard to the Beef We Eat.

The following which recently appeared in one of our leading daily papers is worthy of careful consideration.

"Science has proven that fat meat is far more nutritious than lean, and therefore when we buy cheap lightweight beef we are not getting our money's worth nearly as much as the person who pays but little more for fattened heavy beef.

The reason is that the fat which is all through the tissue of the stall-fed steer contains valuable heating elements which are most necessary to the human body especially in cold weather. The beef that is beautifully marked with fat is the best, not only in flavor, but actually in food value."

Housekeepers should remember when marketing that fat beef is far cheaper even at a higher price than lean, and that they will get as much real food value from a pound of fat and lean beef as they will from a pound and a quarter of lean beef. Mixing fat with it does not answer the same purpose as getting the meat with the fat all through the fibre, nor is the flavor nearly so good or appetizing.

When your appetite craves for beef and BEEF that you can depend upon to be right in quality, weight and price
